What's next in China after the 20th CPC National Congress

Taking place against a backdrop of challenges at home and abroad, the 20th National Congress of the Communist Party of China (CPC) is seen as one of China's most important political events in decades, bringing retirements and promotions within the party's most powerful organs. It is also a focal point for businesses to address future policy directions regarding both the country's domestic agenda and its role in international affairs.

During this webinar, Andrew Gilholm from Control Risks will provide an analysis of the congress conclusion and explore China's political course and business environment in the future.

About the speaker

Andrew Gilholm is a Director of the analysis practice for Greater China and North Asia at Control Risks, overseeing coverage of political, regulatory and security issues across the region. Andrew has worked in the political risk industry focusing on China and Korea for 17 years, mainly based in the region since 2001.

Andrew's comments, analysis or op-eds have appeared in media and journals including the China Economic Quarterly, Journal of Contemporary Chinese Affairs, Financial Times, Wall Street Journal, The Economist and Time Magazine, and in broadcasts by the BBC, Bloomberg and CNBC.
